“The States Reorganization Act, 1956 was a major reform of the boundaries of India's states and territories, organizing them along linguistic lines.”

“States Reorganization Act” was passed in 1956:

Old states were dissolved and new states created on the lines of shared linguistic and ethnic demographics. The separation of Kerala and the Telugu-speaking regions of Madras State enabled the creation of an exclusively Tamil-speaking state of Tamil Nadu. On 1 May 1960, the states of Maharashtra and Gujarat were created out of the bilingual Bombay State, and on 1 November 1966, the larger Punjab state was divided into the smaller, Punjabi-speaking Punjab and Haryanvi-speaking Haryana states.”

“The democracy has been sustained since then. India's sustained democratic freedoms are unique among the world's newly independent states.”
