

Canaanosphere

"Si le Liban n'est pas la plus haute montagne de la Geographie, il est certainement le plus haut sommet de l'Histoire", dit Gabriel Hanotaux.

In English, "If Lebanon is not the highest mountain in Geography, it is certainly the highest peak in History".

بالعربية، "إذا لم يكن لبنان أعلى جبل في الجغرافيا، فهو حكمًا أعلى قمة في التاريخ".

It all totally fits into place... Let us see why and let us start with some examples.

According to Harvard and Cambridge, Greater Iran or Greater Persia (Persian: ایران بزرگ Irān-e Bozorg), also called the Iranosphere or the Persosphere, is an expression that denotes "a wide socio - cultural region which has been affected, to some degree, by the Iranian peoples and the Iranian languages".

We also have as examples the Sinosphere (China), Indosphere, Arabosphere (technically part of the Islamosphere), Turkosphere... On the side, the Islamic regime ruling the Islamic Republic of Iran should be working on the Islamosphere, but Humans are Humans and thus Muslim Humans, like other Humans, are focusing on non essential issues and are hereby giving more importance to their pre - Islamic ethnicity than to their Muslim ethnicity, but as we say, "live and let live".

Now when a baby is named Adam or Sarah or Abraham or Samuel in Alaska or Nigeria or Chili or New Zealand, or Mohammed or Ismael or Ali in Nigeria or Indonesia or Saudi Arabia or Comoro Islands or China (within the partially Muslim province of Xinjiang), these names have no meaning except in the Canaanite language (or in languages that borrowed specific words from Canaanite, like Ali (meaning "high"))).

As well, when we talk about the Western world which is actually the "Western worldwide current" (which includes Russia in the broad definition), this Western world is actually the part that remained, say the Western wing, of a previous worldwide current that Islam seized and absorbed part of (say its Eastern wing), creating the "Islamic worldwide current". This previous worldwide current spanned from Scotland, Portugal and Morocco till Afghanistan and Pakistan and Central Asia to extreme western China (the Uyghurs), passing through Central Europe, Caucasus, Ethiopia and the Arabian Peninsula (recall for instance Persia occupying Greece and Egypt, and Greeks occupying Persia, Romans reaching Mesopotamia and Canaanites (Phoenicians as per the Greek appellation) spreading on both sides (northern Europe and Russia were still politico - civilizationally at the iron age / tribally organized)).

Also, when we name the Western world the Judeo - Christian world from a sociological heritage angle, the concerned elements of this heritage are actually Canaanite, because what is Judeo proper is only for the Jewish people (Judaism is a separate religious ethnicity / deen wa dunya), and what is Christian proper is only for Christian faith (Christianity is only a religion / deen without a dunya), whereas these heritage elements were incorporated by Christianized Jews and the Church that was established, next to Christianized Jews, from the prevailing Canaanite culture in the region.

We still have to say that as Stanford University pointed out, the only sociological entity remaining of the large pre - Islamic worldwide current's eastern wing is the Canaanite people, nowadays called "Christians of Lebanon", since other Christians of the Islamic world are sociologically subdued and cannot freely express themselves at a national level.

Now it is hard to label the so - called Western / Judeo - Christian worldwide current by a name that could technically holistically describe it, so the term "Originally Levantine* Worldwide Current" is used, التيارات العالمي المشرقيّ الأصل, since we know that after millenia of exchange between Egypt, Canaan and Mesopotamia (4000 – 1200 BC), the movement of civilization made it via the Canaanites to Greece, then Carthage was founded by the Canaanites, and then the movement made it from Greece and Carthage to Rome, then to northern Europe and Russia, and later after 1492 to the Americas and Australia. * Levantine in the broad definition, encompassing Egypt, Canaan and Mesopotamia.

Language, alphabet, numbering, diplomatic treaties (see Ugarit and Amarna texts...), sailing, caravane routes, trade, globalization from Scotland to India, democracy, viticulture, olive oil / Mediterranean diet, vaults / arches (qantara), urbanization, glass, metallurgy, food conservation (like for the tuna in amphoras), seasonal festivals, lunisolar calendars, symbolism and iconography (doves, lions, solar disks...) and shaping Judaism, Christianity and Islam (Islam through Judaism and through the Arabic language), these are what clearly passed and influenced the world for millenia to come.

As well, through Christianity and Islam, Canaanite influence (Proper names, Palm day, bread and wine offering, purple cladding, star symbols, altar, incense, holy of holies (ie. the kaaba), the Arabic language...) made it to two other worldwide currents, the sub - Saharan (central and south Africa) and (part of the) South - Eastern Asian currents (Indonesia, the Philippines).

Also, the Brahmi alphabet, used as far as Laos and Cambodia (and Vietnam historically), and Sogdian - derived alphabets used up to Manchuria in northeast China, are a Canaanite legacy, not to mention use of Latin script as main script in all non - Arab African countries (besides Ethiopia and Eritrea which use Ge'ez, also of Canaanite descendance), in all Oceania countries, in much of southeast Asia (Vietnam, Malaysia, Singapore, Brunei, Indonesia, Philippines, East Timor and Papua New Guinea), and in Uzbekistan, Turkmenistan and Azerbaijan, just like in Turkey. "3otyol 7arf lal 3alam " (they gave the world the alphabet), well, almost...

This would make the Canaanite cultural continent, or Greater Canaan, or the Canaanosphere, almost the whole world, as per the map below, in which we refrained from coloring all China, though we could legally have since several parts of it are within the continent.

Sure enough, regions are shared among cultural continents, such as the Greek, Latin, Persian, Turkic, Indian, Chinese and Anglo - Saxon continents... but truth be said, there is no more englobing cultural continent than the Canaanite continent, which was launched from Lebanon, back then part of the Land of Canaan.

This is the scientific explanation of the quote here above. Pas de fumée sans feu.
