

WORLDS OF THE WORLD

With a Twist on Lebanon, Islam and specifically Druzes, as well as Alawites.

Dr. Marc J. Achkar, M.D. and researcher into the Lebanese Dilemma

TABLE OF CONTENT

STRUCTURAL PILLARS, MORAL CODE, CULTURE and ETHNICITY	1
FOUNDATIONAL SACRED REFERENCE PACKAGE, GRAMMAR CODE, SOCIAL NORMATIVE AUTHORITY and WORLD	2
ISLAM, THE SPECIAL CASE: A RELIGION, ETHNICITY AND WORLD	3
THE ISSUE OF ARABISM	4
THE ISSUE OF CHRISTIANITY	5
SAID WESTERN / CHRISTIAN WORLD SOCIAL NORMATIVE AUTHORITY	5
SIDENOTE ON ANCESTRALISM	6
POLITICAL ORGANIZATION AMONG ETHNICITIES	6
WHERE WORLDS CLASH	7
CONFESSIONAL COMMUNITIES	7

STRUCTURAL PILLARS, MORAL CODE, CULTURE and ETHNICITY

A culture is founded on four structural pillars,

1- A symbolic structure, meaning a shared set of foundational true stories and myths, founding ancestors and heroes, sacred places, iconic symbols or motifs, collective traumas or victories, a sole backdrop history... and emotionally charged references through which a social entity recognizes itself within a shared intuition,

2- A temporal structure, meaning the way it experiences historical time and organizes memory across generations (historical turning points, commemorations, shared generational milestones, a calendar and feasts...),

3- A artistic structure, which is a shared aesthetic and expressive system through which a People communicates meaning (language and alphabet, literary forms, humor styles, emotional expression norms, architecture, painting, sculpting, music, sports, poetry and storytelling patterns, cuisine, outfits / attire styles, educational traditions, social entertainment...),

4- And a social structure, which includes social laws (the moral code), moral vocabulary structuring said code and civic life, ritual life, kinship, proper names, character and temperament, greeting rituals, everyday habits, political organization / legal - administrative models (Secularism, Confessionalism, Republic, Tribe, Kingdom...), among others.

Of note, religion proper (defined as cosmology & eschatology*) is an issue that is parallel to culture, but it affects culture through infiltrating several of its pillars via rituals and representations.

* Cosmology is the science of the origin and development of the universe. Eschatology is the part of theology concerned with death, judgment, and the final destiny of the soul and of humankind.

A culture defines an ethnicity (a People / nation / "umma" / "shaab" / "qawm", the latter 3 in Arabic), which yields an identity (not a citizenship). In Arabic, literally translated into "thaqafa" ("Th" as in "through", not "the"), it is synonym to "dunya", roughly translated into "worldliness". Part of it is organized into Law (in Arabic, "Shariaa" - so Shariaa Law is actually "Law law"), which is often reflected into Constitutions.

FOUNDATIONAL SACRED REFERENCE PACKAGE, GRAMMAR CODE, SOCIAL NORMATIVE AUTHORITY and WORLD

An ethnicity relies, through its pillars, on a cornerstone, the "social normative authority", which is a mental framework that offers a grammar code and defines a world. This grammar code is supported by a core vocabulary of moral legitimacy, a historical reference horizon, authority archetypes and a symbolic cosmology (the metaphysical assumptions). It emanates from a Foundational Sacred Reference Package. Please refer to "Table" for examples. In other words, it tells, and has the authority to tell, how the world is fundamentally understood and how life ought to be lived.

Put into perspective, grammar code is the basic unwritten rules that shape how people instinctively think about society, authority, and morality. As analogy to the moral code, the grammar code is the operating system. The moral code is the sentences built on said grammar code. Grammar code asks, for example, "What makes a ruler legitimate? Is truth revealed, inherited, or discovered? Is society centered on the individual, the family, the tribe, or the community? Is history viewed as cyclical, linear, or oriented toward salvation?". It is analogous to the grammar of a language, which speakers follow even without consciously knowing its rules. For example, two societies may both teach charity, but one may see it as obedience to God's command, another may see it as a human rights obligation and a third may see it as maintaining harmony within the community. The moral rule ("help the poor") is similar, but the grammar that justifies it is different.

There are up to 2026 five major sacred foundational reference packages worldwide, and each defines a world. Thus, there are the "Originally Levantine", * Dharmic (aka Indic),  Confucian (roughly Far - Eastern), Islamic, and Ancestral* worlds. There still are, worldwide, around twenty cases of micro - worlds ("micro" as per population count), the well - known ones being the Hebraic micro - world and Gypsie micro - world. Please refer to "Table" for the package's constituencies. Thus, ethnicities worldwide are regrouped, based on existing social normative authorities, into civilizational currents called "worlds".

* See below.

 "Dharma" means "what holds" and is a set of moral orders. (Refer to the comparison table below).

Hence, worlds are defined by a social normative authority. Cultures are modes of expression of a social normative authority and define ethnicities, thus Peoples. Each ethnicity has its own combination of elements for its pillars. Needless to say, ethnicities of the same world share cultural elements. Cultural elements may also be shared, but to a lesser extent, among geographically adjacent ethnicities that fall within different worlds. There is no total mutual exclusivity in belonging to ethnicities and to worlds. Even worlds may share elements of the grammar code. But the main lines are usually clear.

Of note, using the term "civilization" instead of "world" is not appropriate. A civilization is an ethnicity that has achieved certain milestones in diverse domains, like mythology, arts, architecture, business or technology (thus we have the Canaanite / Roman / Greek... civilizations). Not all Peoples reached the civilizational milestone. But often, the term "Western Civilization" is employed, as is the term "Arab World".

N.B.: Race is biological, based on DNA (and previously based on "skin color"). It may or may not correlate with an ethnicity.

To sum up: Moral Code → Culture → Ethnicity, and at a deeper level, Grammar Code → Social Normative Authority → World

ISLAM, THE SPECIAL CASE: A RELIGION, ETHNICITY AND WORLD

Islam, as is, presents not only a distinct "dunya" quasi - fully governing all pillars, but more, a distinct social normative authority; "Quasi" because there are a few, relatively superficial, exceptions where penetration of previous - to - Islam ethnicities' pillars may be incomplete or uncovered by Islamic teaching (men's outfit, local cuisine, some habits and customs...). However, the social normative authority implies being governed by Islamic concepts of law and legitimacy, add to that the Islamic culture. Of note, concerning political organization, theocracy remains the norm, though often masked in practice by administrative secularism.

This is why one cannot be a French / American / Ethiopian / Coptic / Canaanite / Assyrian / Persian Muslim, nor a Muslim French / American / Ethiopian / Coptic / Canaanite / Assyrian / Persian, unless if not being a true Muslim. This is the case of hypocrisy, or in case of "taqiyya" (faking to infiltrate a social entity, then, when possible, dominate it) or, and we shall say it to give a chance to goodwill, in case of confusion.

Thus, Muslims retain relatively superficial elements from their ethnicity that was previous to Islam, as mentioned earlier, but their culture, based on the four structures, and thus their ethnicity, remains Islamic; that is why they sociologically are, and they themselves say that they are, an "umma", meaning a People. And since they do not share their cornerstone, i.e. their social normative authority, with other ethnicities, they remain a world apart, and it is not absurd that they have ratified the "Cairo Declaration for Human Rights in Islam"* (CDHRI) in 1990.

* Concerning the Muslim countries as being members of the United Nations: The Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR) is not a binding treaty; this is why no country voted against in 1948. There were 58 states, 10 of which were Muslim countries. Saudi Arabia abstained from voting due to Islamic conflict. The 8 other Muslim countries that voted for (Afghanistan, Pakistan, Iran, Iraq, Turkey, Syria and Egypt) were newly independent and seeking legitimacy / Yemen was absent. Back - then - "White" - run South Africa abstained because of apartheid, and communist countries abstained because of consideration of lack of guarantees as to economic and social rights. "Christian" - run Lebanon voted for, with Charles Malik playing a pivotal role in the ratification. China voted for, and became communist in 1949. And nowadays all Islamic countries are members of the UN and do not object its declaration. But their social normative authority is different, albeit more, antagonistic to that on which the UDHR was based on, and the CDHRI is antagonistic to the UDHR.

To put things into perspective, as example of elements of social laws emanating from "Originally Levantine" and "Muslim" social normative authorities, we have secularism / theocratism, equality between Humans or lack thereof, level of status for women and minorities, monogamy or polygamy, level of child protection, peacefulness or belligerence, right to self - determination and freedom of belief or lack thereof, supremacy of science in scientific domains or lack thereof, right to criticism or lack thereof, level of mercy, level of "forgiveness / pardoning", pity to the dead or lack thereof, level of individual freedom ...

Hebraism, analogous to Islam as to the cornerstone constituency (both being religion and worldliness / deen wa dunya, and even more so, revealed by "God"), implies the Hebrews being a distinct People, and even being a [micro -] world apart, though both share some elements (lunar calendar, feast names, "Eye for eye, tooth for tooth", circumcision, ablutions...).

And hereby a reminder that the question is not about the religion per se (Christianity, Hinduism, Buddhism, Sikhism, Shenism (Chinese folk) and other ancestral religions, Shinto..., and Islam and Judaism in their religious aspects).

THE ISSUE OF ARABISM

Arabism, all pre - Islamic Peoples of the Arabian Peninsula, meaning Arabs, Hejazites, and the 5 Yemeni Peoples, became Muslims, which means that they disappeared as social entities, because none, not even 1% of any of those seven entities remained unislamized. And the term "Arab" as in "ethnicity" was re - introduced in the 1880's by the Arab renaissance, in areas close to Islam's epicenter (Egypt till Iraq), after falling out after the Muslim conquest. Said re - introduction was based on use of the Arabic language which Islam had appropriated and had been able to enforce as literary language since the 8th century. Starting the 1920's, countries were created in that region, and they chose Arabic as their official language, thus their populations, including non - Muslim minorities, became known as Arabs.

But the truth is, besides the non - Muslim minorities, the religiously Muslims are ethnically simply Muslims, because the bulk of their pillars, and even more, their social normative authority, are Muslim, and not at all Arabic. They have nothing to do with previous Arabism except for the formal language. They have no remnants of any Arabic pillars. Note on the side: within the false consideration of all these peoples as Arabs, Muslims of the Arabian Peninsula, having conserved several remnants of the previous Arabic pillars, are often considered as being "the true Arabs" of nowadays, relative to the Peoples of the current Arab world. But sociologically speaking, none of all these are Arabs, nor Hejazites, nor of the five Yemeni Peoples.

THE ISSUE OF CHRISTIANITY

Clarifying more, Christianity (and possibly other religions besides Islam and Judaism) per se does not deal with any of the cultural elements. Why Christianity is structurally different than Islam and Judaism is because Jesus does not establish a legal system, nor a political order, nor a social hierarchy, nor a state nor a codified civil law. He even does not argue those already established in Judaism (or in Canaanism for that matter, when he met the Canaanite women, or in Romanism when he met Romans). His message is ethical, eschatological, personal and non - coercive: "Render unto Caesar" is not incidental, it is structural.

The Church, later fueled by greed, egocentricity and obstinacy of its fathers, became a legal / regulated, political and administrative organization, and thus imitated Islam in infiltrating cultural pillars, even claiming and partially penetrating the symbolic pillar wherever Christianity geographically made it, but it never overtook over the cornerstone, though it almost did when it meddled into bioethical issues (abortion, suicide, masturbation, LGBT issues, euthanasia, assisted suicide...) and appropriated them, and it was ousted in the last few centuries in the West, while still gripping unto said issues in the East. But this was / is contingent, not theological. And this does not at all mean that the better choice lies opposite to what the Church holds. We are discussing who holds the cards and defends the choice.

Still, secularism remains the norm as a foundational principle for the social normative authority of the so - called "Christian world", thus current Christians deriving said authority from social norms evolving since before Christianity appeared, exactly like atheists and agnostics of their ethnic skin, through democracy and constitutionalism. But when facing liberals, Christians, usually assimilated with conservatives, defend their stances, such as anti - abortionism, as being Christian teachings, since the Church has appropriated them. But these stances emanated from a morality previous to Christianity.

SAID WESTERN / CHRISTIAN WORLD SOCIAL NORMATIVE AUTHORITY

As for what is called the Christian world or the Western world, we have social normative authority that is not religious, is not ethnic, is not specifically regional, is not related to a specific persona, is not only Western though maybe 99% Western when Russia and Eastern Europe are count in the broad definition of "The Western world", and it is composed of constantly evolving originally Levantine social norms such as secular law, popular sovereignty / democracy, foundational principles as to Human rights, individual dignity, women's rights to equality and constitutionalism, among others.

Now this evolving originally Levantine social normative authority defines a worldwide current that has not been officially named, though various terms are employed, such as "Christian", "Western", or "Judeo - Christian". Still, "Western" excludes Levantines who created it and participated in its evolution before Islam took over the East, leaving remnants that still belong to it, "Christian" is normatively false and excludes atheists (thus so is "Judeo - Christian" which even more includes the Hebraic micro - world), "cultural Christian" is a simple linguistic amendment of the previous, "Greco - Roman" (like "Anglo - Saxon") excludes modern legal revolutions and also excludes Levantines (Anglo - Saxon even excludes the Greco - Roman precedent), "Enlightenment" is chronologically narrow and excludes previous achievements, "Secular", "Civic" and "Constitutional" are elements but not foundations themselves, "Humanist" supposes others are not, and "Universal" is a mere claim.

This is where "Originally Levantine" comes in: it is defensible, coherent, and, importantly, honest in what it proposes. There is no claim of moral superiority, current ownership or exclusive authorship, nor of universalism or of geographical barring, and it avoids denying later contributions (Greek, Roman, Germanic, Slavic, Anglo - Saxon...). Of note, it must be acknowledged that Enlightenment translated ancient Levantine ethical intuitions into secular language and legal abstraction, but they remain a Levantine initiative. Is "Originally Levantine" "the most beautiful" name? Honestly? No. But that may actually be a virtue. Beautiful names tend to mythologize and seduce before they explain. This term explains before it seduces, survives scrutiny and forces people to ask why, which is good. Well, until a better proposition.

SIDENOTE ON ANCESTRALISM

As for "Ancestralism", this name is not (only) so because Ancestral Peoples still act as they have acted still ancestral times, but because their ancestors are the active moral agents and the living archive of Law, sanctioning, blessing and punishing based on custom, tradition and ancestral laws, with normativity through continuity ("that is how we have always done it"), and rituals not being symbolic as for other worlds and as the word itself means, but being constitutive, where a broken ritual may mean misfortune or imbalance; thus, rituals in the ancestral world appear to other worlds as mere rituals, in the sense of repeated acts, but they contain fundamental meanings beyond mere rituals. Of note, all other worlds were ancestral until they each developed their own social normative authority.

Needless to say, the ancestral world unites through type of authority and not through a specific authority by itself which is common to all ethnicities of this world. This makes the ancestral world actually a collection of micro / mid - sized worlds (Amazonian, African, Australian (better than "Aboriginal")... (Please refer to Image)). Then again, ancestralism being seemingly similar worldwide, this point remains of not much importance, thus we stick to the term "Ancestral world" uniting all these micro / mid - sized worlds.

POLITICAL ORGANIZATION AMONG ETHNICITIES

Knowing that even ethnicities of a same world would better self - govern though independent countries, or at most unite through federal countries, it is of utmost difficulty, if not impossible, to unite ethnicities from different worlds within a same country. This is why mass immigration, which is a door to many conflicts even if incoming ethnicities belong to the same world (ex: see Romanian mass immigration into France, or suppose a French mass immigration into England), is an even more major problem when ethnicities belong to different worlds (ex: Indian or Muslim mass immigration into England). The practical difference in the latter example lies only in the adverse assertiveness of the immigrants. Immigrants are supposed to let go their original values and embrace local ones: in that example, French would try, Indians try, Muslims do not and even try to enforce their own values on the locals, pushed by their social normative authority to do so.

WHERE WORLDS CLASH

There are limited countries in 2026 that encompass parts of the Islamic and Originally Levantine worlds, should the overlap mean population percentages ranging from 25 to 74%: from the Muslim perspective, Kazakhstan is 70%, Burkina Faso 63%, Lebanon 61%, Albania 56%, Chad 55%, Bosnia Herzegovina 50%, Eritrea 50%, Nigeria 50%, Guinea - Bissau 45%, Côte d'Ivoire 42%, Tanzania 35% Ethiopia 34%, North Macedonia 32%, and one may add Brunei 75% and Benin 24%. Of note, Lebanon is the only such country that is within the heart of the Muslim world.

And in Lebanon, we find the only politically free Levantine People from its Islamic surrounding, the so - called "Christians of Lebanon", ethnically the "Canaanites of Lebanon" (we have to mention "of Lebanon" since Christians of adjacent Tartous in Syria are also Canaanites), labeled by the West by "Phoenicians", as per the Greek appellation.

This shows why Lebanon is "wishfully" expected to be "a message for peaceful and loving co - existence", message that has failed at all levels when one considers Lebanon as having to be a state, a country, revolving around a unitary centralized Constitution, meaning bound by a single law to each issue. If Lebanon is taken in its original definition, a land, the historic "Land of Lebanon", the Lebanese state can be partitioned, and this would still fulfill the message, if the populations of the new - born states can accept the existence of each other and live and interact peacefully, each under their own social normative authority. As mentioned earlier, even federalism would be quasi - impossible, because the Land of Lebanon is straddling over two worlds, not just two ethnicities of a same world.

CONFESSIONAL COMMUNITIES

It rarely occurs that some social groups digress from the moral code of their ethnicity (which is sometimes based on the ethnicity's main religion, be it Muslim, Buddhic...), but not from the ethnic order they belong to, because they still adopt much of the deep, as well as of the superficial, strata of the 4 pillars, and thus they remain part of the ethnicity and world they are in, thus forming separate communities, which end up socially unintegrated within the bulk of their ethnicity, and usually require political organization so that they can preserve themselves. But they remain intelligible only within their ethnicity. Belonging is primarily doctrinal or disciplinary, but becomes social with time. Yet, there is no ethnogenesis, and even more so, the social normative authority remains the same.

When this digression occurs through a belief reform, these communities, originally mere sects at the belief / religious level, are known as "confessional communities" when distinct at the social level, and most are esoteric,* especially those within the Muslim umma.

* Esoteric: obscure; intended for or likely to be understood by only a small number of people with a specialized knowledge or interest.

As examples, we have, within the Islamic ethnicity (relative to the main sect, the Sunnis, who are 90% of Muslims), the Shiites (who are 10% of the Muslims, the Twelvers being 90% of Shiites), and the rest, who represent < 1% of the Muslims, among which we have the Druzes, Syrian Alawites, Anatolian Alawites (Alevis), Ahl al - Haqq / Yarsan, Shabaks, Baha'is, Satpanthis, Sudanese Mahdists, Hausa off - shoots, Hurufi remnants...; within the Dharmic world, the Sikhs, Jains, Lingayats...; and within the Confucian world, the White Lotus...; of note, within the Originally Levantine world, we have the Amish, Hutterites, Old - Order Mennonites... confessional communities, but these are disciplinary - centered, and not belief - centered, confessional communities, not defining neither a new theology nor new metaphysics, but reforming the main theology's practical application and social order.

To clarify more concerning Muslims, the corpus for the Divine Sharia for Sunnis and Shiites, which includes, but is not limited to, their moral code, is the Coran and the Hadiths (as well as the Sira [Muhammad's biography] and Maghazai [his conquests]), though 10 - 20% of Hadiths are common to both, and some Coranic interpretations differ, while for the Druzes, Alawites and other aforementioned groups, they have each their own internal corpus / canon. Specifically, the Coran is generally acknowledged and reinterpreted esoterically within the aforementioned groups (Shiites aside) with the exception of the Druzes and Baha'is whereby, furthermore, the Coran is respected as a previous / exoteric divine revelation but superseded by later scriptures and therefore not normatively binding for daily life. Thus, their moral code (moral Law) is based on a closed canon, "the Wisdom Letters" (Rasa2el al - Hikma), itself based on their esoteric interpretation of the Coran and other texts, and they do not follow Islamic Law strictly.

However, at least within Druzes if not for Baha'is as well, the grammar code remains Islamic: Muhammad as a prophetic archetype, Coran as a primordial revelation, concepts like revelation (wahy), umma and tawhid, use of Islamic prophetic lineage and symbolic vocabulary, Islamic historical axis and consciousness, revealed wisdom, hidden esoteric knowledge derived from revelation (even if remarkably more within Druzes than within other Muslims), and all in all most elements of the four aforementioned pillars (sacred Arabic language, Hijri calendar...). The Coran is still recited socially (funerals...) with praying upon Muhammad, as well as retaining Coranic symbolic language and Islamic vocabulary of legitimacy. We can add to that their leaders and masses openly acknowledging their Islamism or at least their Islamicism, and at least in Lebanon, not minding being "Muhammadites" in the Lebanese Code of Law, and participating in Muslim feasts such as Fitr and Adha, though these additions remain subjective. It would be exceptional that all these elements be a Takiyya behavior (faking to avoid persecution).

All in all, this again certifies that Druzes remain a confessional community within the Muslim ethnicity, which, as said earlier, defines by itself the Muslim world, since Druze identity cannot be explained without the Muslim framework.

And again, what applies to Druzes applies to Sunnis (the major Muslim component) and Shiites, as well as other factions: they are all confessional communities within the Muslim umma / People / ethnicity and world.

It must be said though that specifically Druzes and Baha'is (and less so for aforementioned factions, but at least, still arguably, for Alawites) tend to be considered an ethnicity aside by some because of their distant digression from the core Islamic belief, yet still belonging to the Islamic world, which would thus have to be labelled as "Islamicate". This remains a matter of classification that we ethically keep open. At the political level, the same principle would apply, they would have to be considered as a separate social entity from Muslims as a whole whether they are considered an ethnicity aside or as a confessional community within the Muslim ethnicity, and for cases like Lebanon, the only case worldwide encompassing four relatively major communities (Sunnis, Shiites, Druzes and Canaanites (so - called Christians), if not five with the Alawites, who are much minoritarian), binary equality within the state would thus be based on "Canaanites and Islamicates" instead of "Canaanites and Muslims", with the same management within the Muslim / Islamicate group (which can be equal tri- or quadripartite, or based on proportionality).

One could argue that within an Islamicate - considered group, in case of a federal order, in Lebanon's case, and disregarding Alawites for simplification but where the same extrapolated reasoning would apply, a binary equality would have to be proposed between Druzes on one hand and the Muslims on the other (with Sunnis and Shiites being represented based on proportionality within their Muslim ethnicity), if considering each group, the Druzes on one hand and the non - Druzes on the other, being an ethnicity; but knowing ahead that this would be impossible to suggest for various social and historical reasons (not to mention demographic as well, and if not religious reasons too), this is a crucial element that emphasizes the scientific classification of Druzes as a Muslim confessional community among the Muslim ethnicity and not as an ethnicity by themselves among an Islamicate world. This still earns them cantons and representation based on proportionality within the Muslim ethnicity. Needless to say, partition solves all these issues regardless of their consideration as a confessional community or an ethnicity.

Finally, there is no sole formal classification that can be unicist. Definitions can differ; categorizations can differ. The importance remains the usefulness for practical achievement of peace through correct political organization in a way that gives communities freedom and stops oppression, all while avoiding minorities being a thorn in the flesh of their surroundings.

P.S.: Concerning the map, it is approximative when worlds' boundaries fall within a country. Aforementioned mixed countries with percentages ranging from 30 to 70% were shown partitioned, as well as a few countries with percentages beyond this range but where geographical distribution is clear.

TABLE: WORLDS SPECIFICITIES

	Originally Levantine	Islamic	Dharmic	Confucian	Ancestral	Judaic
Foundational Sacred References Packages	Levantine - Greek - Roman - Anglo - Saxon heritage, Enlightenment, Human Rights Charters, Civic - secular model	Coran & annexes, Muhammad bin Abdallah, Prophetic Tradition	Vedas (first Hindu scriptures), Upanishdads (sacred treatises), Epics	Confucius, Classical Chinese Canon	Ancestral Oral Traditions, Mythic Ancestors, Sacred Landscapes	Torah (Written Law), Tanakh (Bible), Talmud (Oral Law), Rabbinic Reform
Grammar Code	Originally Levantine Universal Evolutionary Principles	Divine Revelation Principles	Dharmic Harmony with Cosmic Order and Spiritual Insight	Confucian Li, Ren and Tian Principles	Ancestral Nature Principles through Ancestors and Spirits	Divine Revelation Principles
Vocabulary of Moral Legitimacy	Rights, Freedom / Liberty, Equality, Justice, Democracy, Citizenship, Rational law, Individual Dignity, Jesus' teachings	Umma, Halal / Haram, Takiyya, Submission, Caliphate, Isnad, Iijaz, Woudou', Shariaa, Honor (honor crimes)...	Dharma (right order), Karma (destiny from cause), Moksha (release from the cycle of rebirth), Nirvana (liberation)	Ritual Propriety (= Proper Conduct: Li), Humaneness (Ren), Heaven (Tian), Moral Principles	Balance with Nature, ancestral Perpetuation	Covenant, Umma (People), Halal / Haram, Submission, Commandment (Mitzvah), Shariaa
Historical Reference Horizon	Bronze Age to Classical Antiquity, Medieval, Renaissance, Enlightenment, Late Democratic Revolutions	Islamic Foundational Era, Arab Renaissance	Ancient Sages, Spiritual and Philosophical Schools	Ancient Chinese Dynasties and traditions	Myths, Narratives	Biblical Patriarchs, Rabbinic Reforms, Diaspora Survival
Authority Archetypes	Philosophers, Legislators, Judges, Citizens, Scientists	Prophet, Imam, Scholar, Law Interpreter	Sages / Gurus, Renunciants	Sages, Elders, Scholars,	Sages, Elders, Tribe / Clan leaders, Spiritual Mediators	Prophets, Rabbis, Torah Teachers
Symbolic Cosmology	Reason as arbiter, Civic - Secular legitimacy	Revelation and its Interpretation / Jurisprudence	Cyclical Time, Paths to Liberation though Cosmic Order	Heaven (Tian)	Tribal and Animism Cosmology	Revelation and Interpretation / Jurisprudence